

Having unsolicited calls coming in the private home is unfortunate in that:

1. Our state has a high number of households with English speaking limitation and often fall prey to solicitations that cause confusion, money expense and time remediate. Many can become wary after the first netting.

2. Many working constituents in New Jersey hold a second job or work throughtout the night, and would have to turn of ringer in order to sleep during the day or there limited time off. This is dangerous because individual will not receive important calls regarding family, or even a call to a safe and timely escape, in case of an emergency. These are factors that I hope the FCC will consider when reviewing the established New Jersey State laws already in effect. Thank you.
